GENERAL SITUATION

The Department of Homeland Security said that Transportation Security Administration workers now have the authority to enforce President Biden’s transportation mask mandate "at TSA screening checkpoints and throughout the commercial and public transportation system". Acting Secretary David Pekoske signed the Determination of National Emergency, which said the TSA can "take actions consistent with the authorities" of its federal jurisdiction to enforce the mask mandate order laid out by the US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention late Friday. The CDC order issued requires people to wear a mask while using any form of public transportation, including on board planes, trains, buses, boats, subways, taxis and ride-shares, as well as inside airports and other transportation hubs. The order goes into effect Monday at 11:59 p.m. The TSA said in a news release that passengers without a mask "may be denied entry, boarding, or continued transport" and that failure to comply with the mask requirement can result in civil penalties.

New York Governor Andrew Cuomo declared a state of emergency throughout the Hudson Valley, New York City and Long Island due to extreme weather conditions. New Yorkers are encouraged to avoid travel. Read more details here.

Governor Cuomo updated New Yorkers on the State vaccination program.

New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio rescheduled Monday’s COVID vaccine appointments because of the snowstorm. Schools were also closed for in-person learning. Outdoor subway service in New York City was suspended starting at 2 p.m. Monday, and schools will remain all-remote Tuesday, 2 February.

Connecticut Governor Ned Lamont said that the state could be lifting some restrictions this week, which may mean looser restrictions for restaurants and places of worship.

Washington, D.C. Mayor Muriel Bowser announced that DC Public Schools students will learn virtually on Monday, Feb. 1 due to winter weather. The District had initially scheduled an event to mark the beginning of in-person learning across all D.C. schools; that has now been postponed. Bowser stated that all students will have their normal class schedules, but all online.

Mayor Bowser says that President Biden’s decision to increase the city’s vaccine distribution by 15% over the next three weeks is “welcome” but is still not enough. She said that “while that is welcome news, we know too that we will continue to have less vaccine than we need to meet the demand for D.C. residents”. D.C. Department of Health data show that the city has allocated 68,750 vaccine doses, of which about 75% (51,421) have been administered as of this past weekend.

Washington, D.C.: Starting Monday, Feb. 1, childcare providers and independent school teachers and staff in D.C. will be eligible to book a vaccination appointment as well. So far, more than 1,130 D.C. public school teachers and staff and 802 charter school teachers and staff have been vaccinated with their first dose.
